CHAPMAN'S MIND
ON THE MARKETS

Stocks and Malaria Vastly

HIS CELL A MODEST JOY.

of Pinochle.

Washington, May 19.—"Have you heard how the market is going today? I received a report of the opening, but have been so rushed all the forenoon with my correspondence and other business matters that I haven't had time to inquire about the later movements."

It was Elverson B. Chapman, the imprisoned broker, who asked in the main rotunda of the district jail this afternoon. He had just come from his cell, or rather office, which is as conveniently fitted out as his own place of business on lower Broadway. He was on his way to the dining room to eat luncheon. He walked rapidly down the winding iron stairs leading from the second-story tier of cells, opened the door and briskly stepped out into the rotunda. He wore the same brown checked suit, but had on a blue yachting cap instead of the pearl colored Alpine. There was a decided business-like air about his movements. He was headed straight for the dining room and walked as complacently as if he were just stepping from the Stock Exchange.

"Why, how are you?" he said, as he shook hands with me. "I was just going to luncheon; will you join me? No? I've had a busy morning. You see, I am away here on my correspondence and have to put in some hard work to catch up. I've had a number of visitors and have been sort of neglecting business."

Mr. Chapman then inquired about the stocks. "Oh, yes," he continued, "I keep up with the market. The man from the hotel who brings my meals calls here twice a day and carries whatever messages I may want to send to our Washington office. We have a direct wire from there to New York, so, you see, I can get word through very easily."

"Then, if I want to, I can use the jail telephone for business in the city or to communicate with the local office. Mail is delivered here three times a day, and the same number of collections are made. The local papers are here when I get up in the morning, and I get the New York papers about 1 o'clock. I have a separate cell where I do my work. It makes a very comfortable little office."

Mr. Chapman's Cell for Business. The cell which Mr. Chapman uses for his office is immediately adjoining the one in which he sleeps. It is a single cell, while his bedroom is a double one. Proprietor Roessle and Chief Clerk Bennett, of the Arlington, who furnished his sleeping cell, also equipped his office. The floor is now covered with a fine Turkish rug. In one corner, near the barred window, is placed a new oak, flat-top desk, with a revolving chair. A small shelf has been placed over the desk, and on this Mr. Chapman places the books and papers which he uses. The cell is five by eight by ten feet, and is well lighted in the day time. Mr. Chapman has been provided with a candle-holder with a shade, which he uses at night. Lamps are allowed in the cell, but Mr. Chapman says he can read and write very well from the candle light. A small baby refrigerator filled with ice water stands in one corner of the room.

"The ventilation is splendid," he said, "and I wouldn't ask for a better place to do my work."

Mr. Chapman arose this morning at 7:30, and had breakfast at 8. After breakfast he went to his cell, which he had placed settled back in his revolving chair and read the papers. He then went over his morning's mail, and was engaged in answering letters until about 10 o'clock. He came down to the rotunda two or three times to see some Washington friends who had called. At noon he returned to his office and resumed his work. After lunch Mr. Chapman remained in the rotunda, smoking and chatting with the guards. While he was sitting there the big iron door of the main entrance opened, and a batch of colored prisoners were brought in. Mr. Chapman looked on with interest as they were searched and assigned to cells. "Poor beggars," he said mournfully.

Then the Mail Came. The letter carrier arrived with the afternoon mail at 2:15 o'clock, and brought a big bundle of papers and letters for the incarcerated broker. Mr. Chapman returned to his office, where he remained until dinner time attending to business matters.

"I don't have the slightest trouble in passing away the time," he said. "In fact, I've got more work than time on my hands. The lights in the cells have to be turned out at 8:30 o'clock, but I don't have to retire unless I want to. I usually go down to the rotunda after the lights are out and sit down at the table with the officers and smoke and chat for an hour or two. I am getting to know the men very well and they are a very pleasant and agreeable set of fellows. They tell a lot of interesting stories about the various prisoners at present in the jail, and some of the notable fellows they have handled. Sometimes the nation joins us and we have quite a family gathering. Warden Leonard is an excellent official, and, take it altogether, I couldn't imagine a nicer place to be in if a man had to stay in jail."

Among Mr. Chapman's visitors to-day were his attorney, Jere M. Wilson; Mr. Hunter, many of those who called did not leave their names. This evening Mr. Chapman was taught to play pinochle by a German guard. "What I get back to New York," he said, laughingly, "I'll show Oswald Ottendorfer a few points about the game." He takes fifteen grains of quinine each day, with an aged and distilled chaser. He has a really hideous fear of malaria.

BOY WANTS $50,000.

Suit Will Soon Be Begun for Jacob Roth's Alleged Injuries at the Hands of a Teacher.

Twelve-year-old Jacob Roth, of No. 210 Stanton street, is back of a $50,000 suit against the city of New York for alleged injuries, resulting from punishment by his teacher, Miss McGinnell, in the Rivington Street Grammar School, January, 11. Mr. Rankine, of the Corporation Counsel's office, said yesterday the claim would be contested.

This case is really an action against the Board of Education," said Lawyer Cukor yesterday. On January 11 Jacob and his playmates were laughing at something during school hours, when Miss McGinnell demanded an explanation. Jacob did not answer. The teacher, it is alleged, caught the boy by the ear, jerked him from his seat and swung him against the sharp edge of the door, laying open the scalp and leaving a severe wound three inches long on the boy's head. He tumbled on the floor, bleeding seriously. Jacob's mother took the lad to Dr. Mulberg, and later Mr. Frisbee, the principal of the school, paid the doctor $5 for a week's treatment.

It is alleged that he explained to the doctor that the school building was not properly constructed, otherwise the boy's head would not have been laid open by the sharp molding.

"We intend to bring the case to trial during the June term of court," said Lawyer Cukor. "The boy is still suffering from his injuries and there is no telling whether he will completely recover his former health."

Principal Frisbee declares that the boy originally told one of the teachers that he had fallen, and later his mother said the teacher had struck him; that later came the story that she had thrown him against the projecting woodwork of the easement.
